ROMANCE OF A CRIME.

Startling Revelations in the Benninghoff Robbery, Which

ELECTRIFIED THE OIL REGIONS.

The Principal Robber Identified in Texas by a Bartender.

PLAYING A VERY BOLD GAME OF BLUFF.

The Theft of $250,000 Compromised by the Payment of $500.

Some peculiar facts connected with the great Benninghoff robbery have just become public. The story is a remarkable one, and describes the escape of the principal culprit; his recognition and arrest in Texas; the bold game played by the robber, and, finally, the compromise effected. The tale is a strange one and well told.

[FROM A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.;

HARRISBURG, February 10 .- A group of State legislators where whiling away the time to-day by recalling remarkable reminiscences. One of them, who is in a position to be thoroughly conversant with the case. related the following hitherto unpublished facts connected with the great Benninghoff In the "good old days," of which oilmen love to tell-the days that proved to so many "bad old days"-the Benninghoff farm, near Petrolia Center, poured out a flood of golden grease that enriched all who were concerned. John Benninghoff, in the time before the great deluge of wealth, had wrested a precarious subsistence from a rocky soil that "would hardly grow white beaus." And when the beaus where grown it was almost worth a man's life to go out among the rattlesnakes to gather them in. But Benninghoff did not worry because of that. If his lot was a hard one, he had been inured to it from childhood, and only vaguely knew of any better. If there were better, others enjoyed it, and envy found no place in his breast.

Peacefully, if ruggedly, moved along the life of John Benninghoff until Colonel Drake, with his spring pole, bored the earth near where the Indians far back into the shades of American myth had dipped Sen-eca oil from a log-walled well and boasted of its healing virtues, transmitting their faith from generation to generation until the white man came, and, absorbing the credulity of his red brother, flew the praises of its curative powers far abroad.

A MAGIC WAND.

Colonel Drake's springpole proved a magic wand that punched a hole from which, as the years slid by, flowed a broadening, deepening stream of wealth. Many have dipped in it, many have been overwhelmed in it and smothered. Rumors of it reached John Benninghoff as of something far away, and soon the stream surged

Adventurers from the east and from the west and from the north and from the south rushed to the region of Oil Creek, and the narrow valley and the adjacent hills were soon dotted with derricks and engine houses. Industry followed in the wake of adventure, and prosperous communities began to grow where before had flourished only the wild vegetation of the primeval forest. Men came to John Benninghoff and leased the oil right of his rock-bottomed farm. A generous share of the oil that might flow responsive to the persuasive power of the irill was to be his. Fickle fortune, that frowned on so many, here put on her most expansive smile, and the torrent that surged ity of others fiaunted itself before them. Men who preved on the accumulations of industry in the older communities flocked to the busy vale of the Oil Creek and found it a fat field. With envious and covetous eyes they saw and with daring spirits they went abroad to do wicked deeds. The accomulating riches of John Benninghoff tempted them. His closeness, born of years of self-denial, or the sturdiness of his integrity, kept him in the beaten path of virto and though his wealth grew to be fabulous as the years were whirled backward into the broad half of eternity from which the thin dividing line of the present parts the fut-ure, his manners were as plain and his habits as frugal as ever.

ROBBED OF HIS HOARDS.

Desperate men soon learned that John Benninghoff did not trust the banks. His great possessions were hoarded in his home, and one night it was visited. The family was tied fast, and Benninghoff's feet were toasted at the fire until at last, in agony, he showed his tormentors where $250,000 was concealed, and they went away contented. Three times as much more was concealed in the house, but the nocturnal visitors prob-ably did not dream there could be more than the immense sum they carried away with them, or, if they did, their wildest imagination would never have conjured up the Arabian Nights' riches the house con-

Two of the robbers were captured, but they were only tools in the hands of another -tools, not only, but dupes. The principal in the transaction, who had planned the deed, remained quietly at Meadville until the plunder was brought to him and deliv-ered. Then he left for the West, with an appointment to meet and divide with the men who had executed his plans. But he never met them. He disappeared, and they and Benninghoff were minus a fortune. The two who were taken were sent to the peni-tentiary for a term of years, but the princi-pal went free to enjoy his stolen wealth.

In 1878 a man from Crawford county sold plain and mixed drinks in the growing town of Denver. One day a prosperous cattle man leaned his elbow on the bar and took his whisky as a Western cattle man should—undiluted and with all the usual signs of enjoyment. The saloon keeper from Crawford county had known him in that locality by the name of Saeger, and knew him as the reputed principal in the Benninghoff robbery. Saeger had changed his name with his business in the Western should-undiluted and with all the usual wilds, and on the long cattle drive from Texas to Denver none was more esteemed

A NEMESTS.

The Crawford county bartender kept his own counsel in the presence of Saeger, but his heart jumped with joy as he remembered that a reward of $20,000 had once been offered for the apprehension of that gentle-man and the booty he carried away with him. Saeger had increased his wealth. him. Saeger had increased his wealth. The cattle on many broad prairie pastures were his. It was in his power to make restitution and the barkeeper resolved that a goodly share of that restitution should be transferred to his own pocket. A private consultation with accommodating Denver detectives followed, and Saeger was soon in the custody of the Sheriff. A telegram sped over the wires to Chief of Police Rouse, of Titusville. Bouse went to Greenville, Mercer county, to which place the Benninghoff family had removed after their rough experience with robbers. All he asked of Benninghoff for the trip was his expenses, Benninghoff for the trip was his expenses, and a contract was drawn up covering the matter of reward in the event of success. When Bouse arrived at Denver he saw the

"This man is yours. I can't deal with you. I will send for Benninghoff."

John Benninghoff was well stricken in years and the long journey was too much for him to attempt. His son Joseph went instead, and then followed one of the strangers negotiations in arminal history. strangest negotiations in criminal history.

Benninghoff saw Saeger and Saeger studied Benninghoff and formed his plans. It was a game of chance in which Saeger won. Joe Benninghoff was no match for a clear headed man, nerved by the thought of what he had to lose.

"I have but little money with me," said Saeger. "My property is all in cattle in Texas. We will go there and settle this matter."

A SHREWD SCHEME.

The detectives demurred. Texas was a wild country in those days and they were

They might go there and not return.

Saeger had studied his man and stood firm.

There was nothing for it but to take him back to the scene of his crime, and, having back to the scene of his crime, and, having found that the $20,000 reward was one of the things of the past, they offered to deliver their prisoner into the Franklin jail for $2,000. Saeger accepted the offer, but Benninghoff vacillated. He knew the expenses of the conviction of the minor criminals, and dreaded the fight the major one would make. Finally he withdrew from the baryain. Then the detectives offered the bargain. Then the detectives offered for $500 to deliver their prisoner safely in Cheyenne, from which place on the trip home there was little danger of rescue. Benninghoff consented and again drew back.

The Cheyenne detectives waxed wroth, and Chief of Police Rouse became disgusted. Another and stranger offer was then made. The detectives would pay Benninghoff $500 if he would turn the prisoner over to them and agree not to prosecute him. Benninghoff jumped at the offer. The trugal habits inbred during the long years of family poverty cropped out. offer. The frugal habits inbred during the long years of family poverty cropped out. The $500 would more than pay all the expenses of his trip to Denver. The detectives saw his eagerness and took advantage of it. At last they compromised on a smaller sum and Benninghoff turned his face to the rising sun, much relieved that he had so nicely rid himself of the whole business, that the expenses of his trip were paid, and that the family fortune was not to be further depleted by an effort to recover the lost quarter of a million. quarter of a million.

As for the Denver detectives, they probably cleared a nice sum by buying Saeger's freedom from Benninghoff, and selling it to him. He was soon at liberty, and under another name is one of the most respected

THE INJUSTICE OF FATE.

Worthy Widows Working for Pittances Unbanged Ruscals Filling Sinecures.

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.] WASHINGTON, February 10. - In certain bureau of one of the departments there are three women, each about 50 years old, who patiently plod along day after day for salaries which are less than former allowances of pin money. One is the widow of a man who made a national reputation when brains were required to attain dis-tinction. Like most of the great men of his time he lived up to his income, and when he died his widow had barely sufficient he died his widow had barely sufficient means to bury him. Another was often the center of admiring throngs at the receptions of her distinguished husband when he was Governor of one of the most important States of the Union. He too, died poor, and the Congressional delegation from his State (several members of which were lifted from obscurity by him) testified their estimate of his work and repaid their personal obligations by obtaining for his widow a $900 clerkship. The third figure is that of the widow of a man who left a prosperous business to answer the call of prosperous business to answer the call of duty and laid down his life in defense of the nation, but not before his heroism won for him a brevet brigadier-generalship. When his estate was settled it was found that the widow and orphans had either to starve or work, and the brave little woman dried her tears, and after many rebuffs and disappointments obtained a clerkship of the lowest class, which she still holds, and with the help of a pitiful pension she keeps the wolf from the door. In the same department with these ladies there is a chief of division who was once keeper of a gambling saloon and who was arrested during the late war as a bounty and gushed from the wounded bosom of Mother Earth turned rapidly into green-backs, that formed the currency of the period, and into Government bonds.

But wealth brings trouble, and John Benninghoff worried as never before in his days of poverty. Men who wooed fortune unavailingly became desperate as the preserve. cial appears quite frequently in the society columns of the papers, and he is on fa-miliar terms with a large number of mem-of the shutters, and to hearing cries of bers of the diplomatic circle

THE HAUNTED HOUSE

Around Which Cluster the Tales of Two Historical Tragedies

MAY NOT BE MR. BLAINE'S HOUSE.

Coincidental Meeting of Three Persons Connected With It.

A GRIM, SILENT AND SECUDED PLACE

aid to be the Abode of Ghostly Re-Enactors of Seeral Old Scenes.

[CORRESPONDENCE OF THE DISPATCH.] WASHINGTON, February 9 .- It is some what curious that Secretary Blaine, that is to be, has chosen for his residence, doubtless for the next four years, the old Seward house, which is in this day only associated with tragedies and ghosts. Its shutters have been closed for years, and even the most unimaginative, knowing the history of the place, can hardly avoid fancying the must and dust of the decayed interior, and giving a sort of sneaking credence to the stories of the superstitions. Though near to the Arlington Hotel, and in sight of the White House, and scarcely detached from the yellow old mansion which is a place of the yellow old mansion which is a place of elegant festivity under the occupancy and hospitality of Senator Cameron, it is a grim, silent and secluded place even in the early evening, as it is off from the great thoroughfares and facing the giant trees of Lafayette park, which make that a place of impenetrable gloom at night, an ideal place for ghosts of the more refined type.

TALES OF TWO TRAGEDIES. The history of the two tragedies which give to the house its sinister character is so well known that it is not necessary to give the details. It was in front of the old man-sion that General Sickles shot and killed Key, the intimate friend of his beautiful but faithless wife. There still is the big tree in the shadow of which the general tree in the shadow of which the general stood awaiting the appearance of his rival, and there are the bricks on which Key fell at the first shot; and as they are mottled with a darker red at that very spot, it is hard to think that this is not the indelible stain of the lover's blood which gushed from the hole between his fifth and sixth ribs, di-rectly ever his heart rectly over his heart. It is asserted by more than a few of the good people who are forced to travel that way in the dead of night that they have way in the dead of night that they have seen this tragedy repeatedly re-enacted in the street, especially on very dark and stormy nights, when spirits are supposed to be particularly bold, the spirit and astral forms of the dead and living who bore any share in the dramatic episode, the signaling of the lady and her lover from the windows of their rooms, the grim waiting of the en-raged husband, the gay and triumphal step of the modern Launcelot as he emerges from his mansion, the killing shot and

THE QUICK DEATH, all being portrayed by intangible forms of these mysterious individualities which are alleged to be our condition after death, and which seem, according to popular belief, to have nothing better to do than to repeat, in an absurdly inconsequential manner, the naughty things they have been guilty of during their more substantial lives.

So to it is the assertion of the develops:

So, too, it is the assertion of the devotees of ghostism that in the moldy interior of of ghostism that in the moldy interior of the old mansion there is nightly enacted the thrilling scene of the attempted assassination of Secretary Seward, the entrance of Payne, the accomplice of Booth, his easy penetration to the room of the sick man, the horrible stabbing, the groans and cries of the victim, the thud of his fall on the floor as he rolled down between the bed and the wait, the outcries of servants and attendants, the flight of the assassin. A gentleman who once occupied the house for a few man who once occupied the house for a few days tells me that his hair turned gray with the tright that he endured, before he would make up his mised to give way to what he thought must be merely the work of his imagination, and leave the place. A cloud

DISTRESS AND TERROR. from the interior, when the mansion was known to be unoccupied. I am incredulous on this score, however. For more than two years I passed the house nearly every night at about that hour when churchyards yawn and graves give up their dead, without see-ing aught but the grim and silent walls of the old mansion. But somehow it has al-ways been my luck to be denied a view of ways been my luck to be denied a view of spirits and astral bodies, even at the short range of the professional seance, where I never was able to discover anything more spiritual than the invariably fat and well-groomed medium. For this reason I long ago made up my mind not to believe in spirits unless, I saw them, and therefore I am wholly skeptical in regard to the stories of the haunting of the old Seward house. Yet I have no doubt that if I were to be Mr. Harrison's Secretary of State and were to Harrison's Secretary of State, and were to lease and occupy that moss-grown mansion, I would, as Blaine will, catch myself, when wakeful, in the dead hours of the night, listening intently for sounds, and straining my eyes in the darkness to see sights, such as have been accepted by the superstitious as real occurrences on that spot rendered just a bit awful by its romantic and tragic

STUDY IN PSYCHOLOGY. Now, was it accident, or was it through the guidance of invisible influence that three persons were strangely brought to-gether almost in front of that old mansion the other day? It was on the very day when Mr. Blaine was said to have secured the lease of the house. On that day, a moment after 4 o'clock of the afternoon, I happened to be in the neighborhood of Senator Cameron's. A tail commanding Senator Cameron's. A tail, commanding figure interposed between me and the horizon toward the Arlington. The figure was that of Mr. Blaine. The tall figure came that of Mr. Blaine. The tall figure came near me and stopped in front of the house of romance and tragedy. A strange, thumping sound struck my ear from the opposite direction. Looking around, I was astonished to see no less an interesting a personage than General Sickles, handsome almost as he was on the evening when he sent a bullet to the heart of Key robust though limping alcongregation. of Key, robust, though limping along on his two crutches, only vacant air where one of his legs ought to be. As he came near the place so fraught with terrible memories gled into Justice Gorman's private room at the Yorkville court this morning, and the Justice remained with them for some time. Admittance was denied to everybody. Afterward the Justice said:

"The young woman was a prisoner, and the complainant against her was her fathership. She went to his house and he or speak to him, but the brave General did not see the noted publicist, if indeed he saw any without speak. see the noted publicist, if indeed he saw any thing at all, and passed on without speak

ANOTHER CHARACTER APPEARS. Hearing a step behind me I again looked around and beheld whom? The attendant who was in the hall at the Seward House on the evening of the attempted assassination, who was knocked aside by Payne, and who himself narrowly escaped being stabbed in his attempt to impede the escape of the murderer. This was Mr. Forsberg, now a watchman at the War Department, then a confidential attendant of Seward, father of the noted actor who died recently, and also one of the best-known artists of this city.

Here were three persons come together, one the intending occupant of the House, the second Secretary of State to be domiciled there, with that in store for him which no one could foresee; another the chief actor in one could foresee; another the chief actor in a tragedy which was the result of a startling tale of infidelity in one of the loveliest of women; another the chief living participant women; another the chief living participant in an occurrence which shocked the whole world in connection with the cotemporaneous assassination of President Lincoln—the three persons of all others in the world the most interested at this time in the associations and the future of that House.

I may say in closing, that it is stated that Blaine has not leased the Seward house. I know not how that may be. I believed the statement that he had. I am quite as ready to believe that he has not. It is impossible to get at the truth of anything in Washington, A prominent real estate broker, who is a devout church member, asserted that the prospective Secretary had effected the lease. That is all I know about it. Possibly the man from Maine is scared off by the supposititious ghosts, though with Gail Hamilton in his family I can hardly imagine this to be the fact.

.:. A FEW WORDS .:. ABOUT LEADERS.

Some merchants profess a holy horror of "Leaders." They consider them illegitimate, unbusiness like, demoralizing, etc., etc., etc., to the end of the chapter. Now WE believe in "Leaders," and are not above giving them occasionally AND OFTENER. Sometimes business is a little sluggish and needs stimulating and we feel that we cannot afford to stand still. Our expenses are too large for us to do a small business, and we are determined to sell goods even if necessary to cut profits. Of course we prefer a large profit to a small profit, but we most decidedly prefer a small profit to no profit at all, just as a small loaf is better than no bread.

It is astonishing how a bargain, "A GOOD, GENUINE BARGAIN," will stirup trade. TALK OF MONEY BE-ING SCARCE! Why a genuine bar-gain (call them "Leaders," if you will) will loosen all the stockings and leather pouches, and draw money from the savings banks, etc. The very people who possess these savings-the frugal ones-they are the very first to appreciate a bar-

"Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung."

This week we shall offer MORE 'LEADERS" than ever. Visit each department of our store and get our prices.
